Braunschweiger (Named after Braunschweig, Germany) is a smoked pork liver sausage, nearly always, distinguished from other liverwurst in that it is soft enough to be used as a spread. Braunschweiger is very rich, and has a very high amount of vitamin A, iron and protein.

Leberkäse—a specialty food found in the south of Germany, in Austria and parts of Switzerland. Literally translates to "liver-cheese", and since the dish traditionally contains neither liver nor cheese. The bread-like slices can be pan-fried, finger-thick sliced and seasoned with mustard, or sliced and served cold on sandwiches.

Smoked Polish Sausage—This sausage is seasoned with fresh garlic, herbs and spices and then gently smoked in the backyard smokehouse. It can also be served hot—boiled, baked or grilled.

Weisswurst/Bockwurst—(Literally white sausage) is a traditional Bavarian sausage made from very finely minced veal and fresh pork. The sausages are heated in water just short of boiling for about ten minutes, which will turn them greyish-white.

Swedish Potato Sausage (Potatis Korv) - is a fresh sausage made with ground Pork and Beef that is mixed with Potatoes, Onions, Salt and Pepper. This Natural Casing Sausage is considered mild by most palettes.

Landjäger—Popular as a snack food during activities such as hiking and also have a history as soldier's food because they kept without refrigeration and come in single-meal portions Made with lean pork and beef Seasoned and smoked with real Hickory. Taste like summer sausage but more bit more smoky flavor and not as greasy.

Bavarian Bratwurst—The name is German derived from Old High German brätwurst, from brät- which is fine chopped meat and -wurst, sausage. They have a very robust flavor, and are neither too spicy or mild.

Knackwurst (sometimes knockwurst, from German literally "crack sausage") is a type of small soft German sausage intended to be eaten by hand. It is a short chubby sausage made from pork and beef with fresh garlic. It is often very seasoned. Its taste is often compared to that of a frankfurter.

Cheddarwurst—This Natural Casing Sausage has a very bold flavor that is only enhanced with the addition of Sharp Cheddar Cheese.
